

A European Life

Michael Tracy grew up in Scotland during the war of 1939-45. After gaining scholarships to Fettes College in Edinburgh, then to Cambridge University (studying Modern Languages, then Economics), he worked in international organisations and for ten years was a Director in the Council Secretariat of the European Union. He also pursued an academic career, writing on agricultural policy and economics and lecturing in various European universities, including Wye College in England and the College of Europe in Bruges. In Moscow in 1991 he witnessed at close quarters the collapse of the Soviet Union, and subsequently was involved in a new institute in St. Petersburg. Subsequently he had advisory and teaching roles in the countries of Central/Eastern Europe during their transition to market economies and accession to the European Union. His final chapter assesses the issues currently facing both the European Union and Russia. Taking the story up to May 2010, it discusses the prospects for the eurozone, and the implications of Britains new coalition government for Britains relations with the EU (a subject which he has followed from the outset in the late 1950s). This is not a history: it is a personal, lively and often humorous account of Michael Tracys experiences, in which personal contacts figure largely. Nor is it a tract for or against the European Union; it sheds a more human light on proceedings in Brussels. Graham Dalton of the University of Aberdeen admires the depth of knowledge at the heart of Michael Tracys memoir and concludes: His thoughts on Europe are well-founded, rounded and are to be taken seriously. After retirement, Michael continues to live in Belgium, where he and his wife have a hobby farm with pedigree sheep. He also spends time in an Andalucian mountain village. His main hobby in both places, as an amateur pianist, is making music with friends. Michaels other main works are: Government and Agriculture in Western Europe, 1880-1988 (3rd edn. 1989); Food and Agriculture in a Market Economy an introduction to theory, practice and policy (1993); and in retirement: The World of the Edwardian Child as seen in Arthur Mees Childrens Encyclop?dia 1908-1910 (2008)
