

The Four Words for Home: A Memoir of Two Families

Angie Chuang takes on an assignment to find the human face of the country were about to bomb weeks after the 2001 terrorist attacks. Her five-year journey into the lives of the Shirzai family transports her far beyond journalism. As she is drawn ever deeper into the Shirzaiss lives, Chuang confronts unknown territory closer to home. Her own immigrant family from Taiwan is falling apart. Mental illness, divorce, and deeply rooted cultural taboos have shattered her familys American Dream. Ultimately, she finds the two families are more similar than she had imagined. It is in journeying far away from her own home that she is drawn back to her rootsand to confront the hard truth and broken places that lie at the heart of so many stories of migration. Angie Chuang is a writer and educator based in Washington, D.C. Her work has appeared in Creative Nonfiction, The Asian American Literary Review, and The Best Womens Travel Writing. She has received fellowships from Yaddo, Hedgebrook, Virginia Center for the Creative Arts, Jentel, and Ragdale. She is on the Journalism faculty of American Universitys School of Communication.
