Not illustrated. 1858 Excerpt: ...of your eyes, the laugh of your lips: even the moles on your neck and brow are visible to me. I shall never be happy again. And yet there is a glimmering of hope,--not for me, but for others,--which I must not destroy. I cannot mingle my tears with your sisters: let them hope if they can. I cannot! May 6.--The public debt of Florida presses with the weight of two hundred dollars upon every man in Florida; and yet our people dont want to go into the Union, for fear of taxation I May 28.--I am far from happy. There are cares which oppress me. My private business suffers. There is nobody to help me, but in public matters. Above all, my noble son! Alas! I shall go down into the grave unto my son mourning. Well, I will pluck up courage and strive to do for my country and my family, my friends and myself. We shall see how things will be a year hence. To my office. Gen. Miller keeps me in formal discourse for nearly two hours, interrupted only by Capt. s awkward history of his scouts and soldier-life. He complains of the multitude of snakes in the lagoons and lowlands near the seaboard. July 11.--Head portions of the Psalms. What a heart David must have possessed! How thoroughly penetrated by the love of God! 1841, March 29.--How much have I suffered!--a thousand deaths! My poor heart, why is it not broken? and my head, why not crazed? Both have been near such destiny; but I am now calm, and think my spirit has achieved a mastery over misfortune. The mail comes. Reports of my dismissal from office not confirmed by the papers; but it will come. Harrison is in a terrible fix,--overrun by politicians and office-seekers. It would not be wonderful if the old fellows steps to the grave were not hastened by such cares. April 2.--I am preparing for the eje...
