Excerpt from The Newspaper Press: In Part of the Last Century, and Up to the Present Period of 1860

The following Notices of the death of the Author of this Work we extracted from the Shrewsbury Newspapers.

Death Of The Father Of The English Press.

We have this day to record the death of one of the oldest and most respected members of The Fourth Estate in England - Mr. James Amphlett, who departed this life, yesterday, at his residence, Severn-cottage, in this town, full of years and journalistic honours.

The death of Mr. Amphlett has broken one of the few remaining links which bind, as it were, the past and present age of journalism together.

Writing his first leader - and leaders were scarce things in country newspapers at that time - upwards of sixty years ago, in a Staffordshire newspaper, the mind can scarcely grasp the idea that it was only some nine years since his last composition of the kind was inserted in our contemporary the Journal of which paper he was for several years editor.

Having a nice perception of the amenities of journalism, he was open-hearted and generous as a political opponent, and while he upheld his party he never endangered personal friendships.

Since his retirement from the active duties of editorial life he has contributed much to various newspapers, our own among the number; and whilst the decadence of his once-masculine powers was visible in his compositions, there were the unmistakeable signs of that strength of intellect which unrelenting Time had in process of years been gradually deadening.

In early days Mr. Amphlett was a powerful, vigorous, and sarcastic writer, his apt illustrations, witty points, and extensive reading combining to give force to the productions of his pen.

His last effort was the compilation of a volume of Recollections, but he did not live to see them published (although nearly ready.)

Mr.

Amphlett was well known to and intimate with several of the leading politicians and theatrical celebrities of the earlier part of the present century, and many were the curious anecdotes of their sayings and doings he stored in his retentive memory. During his long life he was connected with various newspapers either as proprietor or editor, and his comprehensive knowledge of foreign politics caused his writings to be greatly noticed. Cheerful and intelligent, a hearty and jovial companion, his society was extensively courted, and many a time and oft has he set the table in a roar by his sallies of wit or his ready repartee. He has departed from among us in a green old age, having attained some fifteen years beyond the proverbial three score and ten; and while we, as brother journalists, say, Peace to his ashes, we may be permitted to add our personal tribute of sincere esteem and regard for him as a friend. - Shrewsbury Chronicle, July 20th, 1860. The Late James Amphlett, Esq. Our obituary of this week contains the death of this highly-esteemed gentleman, who has for some years past occupied a somewhat prominent position in this town as one of its literary celebrities.
